

4 things to do right now to improve your putting!

by Nancy Harvey, Lead senior instructor
Dana Rader Golf School

1

Stare at the hole, glance at the ball

Take some rehearsal swings while looking at the hole. Are there any other “target games” where you do not look at the target? Imagine tossing a ball underhand to the hole to get a feel for the length and pace of your putt.

Double your read

Most amateurs miss putts on the low side, and gravity pulls the ball farther away from the hole. If you are consistently missing on the low side of the hole “double your read”, meaning take twice as much break as you think you need, to start your putt.

Look for the lowest point to get the best read

Look for low points to help read your putts. You see more slope and undulation from low sides of the putt.

4

Putt like a pendulum

You want the same speed and length taking the club back and through your putt. No positive or negative acceleration. Tick – Tock.
